

Figure 2-9 An x-ray tube. Electrons are emitted thermally from the heated cathode C and are accelerated toward the anode target A by the applied potential  $V$ . X rays are emitted from the target when electrons are stopped by striking it.